Stephen's Children not Homeless Yet.

Notwithstanding the Council House (the old place of meeting of his classes) has been destroyed by the flames, Mr. Stephens has found another suitable place, and in answer to hundreds of little folk's enquiries yesterday he wishes to state that Bishop Atwood of the Thirteenth Ward has kindly given the use of the assembly rooms for their meetings or schools, where they will meet in the future, commencing by meeting there to-night at 6 o'clock, in place of at the Tabernacle (that building being so damaged that it is inconvenient to have them meet there). All are wanted that can attend. It will also be a source of gratification to the little ones to learn that Mr. Stephens' organ was taken out uninjured by some kind persons; and to his great surprise he found the books of the little folks (worth nearly $50) in the ruins yesterday morning; not more than half a dozen of them being damaged at all seriously; for which he is gratified.

Supposed Incendiary Work.

The Loss Will Fall Below $100,000.

The Explosion's Havoc—Plate Glass at a Premium.

The Losers and Their Losses.

The calmer and more detailed estimate of the losses occasioned by the terrible fire of Thursday morning, places the total loss in the vicinity of $100,000, perhaps a trifle less—which is as near the loss approximated by the HERALD yesterday morning as may be. Naturally enough it was the topic of conversation on Thursday, to the exclusion of all other subjects, and while any number of versions were given out and any number of statements made by any number of persons, all of a more or less unsatisfactory character, nearly all terminated with the avowal that it must have been the work of an incendiary. It is difficult to imagine what could have induced any being wilfully to start the fire. It is always a thing which honest and just people can never explain; why any being should wantonly destroy property; and the cause is especially unfathomable in the case of General Clawson, a man who is universally esteemed. He is not known to have any enemies; he can have none, for the reason that, just and liberal to an unusual degree, he could not pursue a course calculated to do injury to any person, and for that reason no one could feel disposed to wrong him unless insane or at heart a villain. The theory of spontaneous combustion is absurd, for there was nothing which could cause spontaneous combustion; intimations that the fire was communicated from some structures in the vicinity are also abandoned as unworthy of being entertained; and as there was no fire in the place itself, all are forced to return to the suggestion of incendiary. There are two reasons why it might have been the work of an incendiary. There are any number of low, vicious beings who, from their craven hearts, delight in burning from a wanton, wicked spirit, or it might have been started by an organized gang desirous—during the absence of a portion of the fire department—of attracting general attention in a certain quarter while they might enter other places of business and pilfer and rob. If the latter was the object, then from all that can be learned, it proved futile, for the thefts that were committed were of a very trifling character. After the explosion, however, there were several rather determined attempts to enter a number of the stores by crowds of people. The Co-op was soon surrounded by a mob who started to go in, and but for the most decided opposition would have forced an entrance; and this, once secured, it is impossible to estimate the extent of the pillaging that would have been done. The same is true of Hardy Brothers & Burton, and of a number of other places. One fellow was caught reaching through a broken window in Mr. D. O. Calder's store, and helping himself to what was hanging there. But so effective proved the alarm that the streets were filled with people before the explosion occurred, and it was difficult for those with thieving propensities to operate successfully, especially when the conflagration illuminated the streets until they were as bright as day.

As near as can be estimated the fire started in the middle of General Clawson's wagon and farming implement department, and had every article been saturated with kerosene the blaze could not have ascended or licked up everything before it with greater rapidity. In three minutes after the alarm of fire was started from the HERALD office composing rooms, persons were on the ground and the work of taking out articles had commenced. Five minutes later the flames were at the front of the shop and those who were attempting to save some of the wagons and buggies were compelled to retreat. At this time it was not known that any powder was in the shop, and therefore this knowledge did not restrain people from working at the spot. The whole place was an assured wreck before any idea of the presence of powder entered any person's mind, and it would not have been possible to have saved another spoke if there had not been an ounce on the premises.

The next place which the rescuing party broke into was the Council House, the corice and dome of which was now on fire, and a few articles, as mentioned on Thursday morning, were saved. At this time also Savage's Art Bazar began to burn and the doors were burst open and a stream of hard workers entered and began to carry out articles to the opposite side of the street. The firemen were there with water, and no thought was given to attempting to save Mr. Clawson's place, which was one mass of flames, and which was being consumed with incredible rapidity. Then information that a quantity of powder was stored in the place was given and rapidly communicated to people in the Council House, and others thereabouts. The street was at once cleared and with the exception of perhaps two persons, no one was on South Temple street within half a block of the place when the explosion took place. To the timely information given by Mr. Clawson is due the fact that no one was fatally injured, for pieces of red hot iron and burning timbers were thrown quite a distance and with a velocity that must have done fatal harm if they had come in contact with any one. It happened that the persons working in Mr. Savage's store were not aware of the impending explosion, and therefore were taken completely unawares. Some were knocked down, some cut and bruised a little; but the only person very seriously injured was Tom Dozier, who was working like a beaver in the rear of Mr. Savage's establishment and not only received the full force of the shock itself, but was also burned with part of the powder. He was cut terribly over the head and hands with fragments of flying glass and led to Dr. Benedict's office in a pitiable condition, where he was pasted up with sticking plaster and where he still remains. The most serious injury is to his spine, but the character of the harm has done is not yet fully known. His injuries are not of a fatal nature, though quite severe.

The effect of the explosion was to cause an abandonment of the Art Bazar, and everything else was given up to the flames, which by this time had already rendered further work inside unsafe. From this time the fire was under control. There was no hope for the Council House, nor for the Bazar, nor the little wooden places adjoining, but the streams of water were played vigorously and any further extension of the flames rendered improbable.

The streets were filled before the explosion took place, but the force of the concussion, while it did not even shake the chimney off the Council House, which was within two rods of the powder, and did not move chairs within three rods, and failed to lift a wagon still closer, was still so great that it reached houses a great distance away and brought people out of their beds from every quarter of the city, who rushed in breathless haste to the scene of the fire which could plainly be seen a distance of twenty miles. All along the east side of Main street, beginning with the Co-op, and extending to and including the Deseret National Bank Corner, the sidewalk glistened with plate glass and was literally covered to the depth of an inch in places. A number of places on the west side were also injured, but the damage was far from being as great as on the opposite side. Along First South street also considerable damage was done, and down Main street, as far as Joslin & Park's, places were picked out, one here and one there—where the plate glass was of largest dimensions—and the glass destroyed. Lamps and crockery were destroyed and panes of glass broken in places quite a distance away. Had it not been for the damage to glass and to the residences that were situated in the vicinity, the explosion would have been a benefit, for it helped to destroy the effect of the fire, by scattering it a great deal. Of course for a time there was danger of other places being set on fire from the flying embers thrown considerable distances by the explosion, but though these were quite numerous, they were all extinguished with comparatively little trouble.

Portions of the Art Bazar fell, but the Council House walls remained intact, unmoved either by the explosion or by the flames. The residence of General Wells was considerably damaged, the doors being blown open and unhinged, wardrobes and bureaus moved out into the middle of rooms, the casings torn out, and plastering loosened and so on. The dwelling house of Dr. Jos. Richards was also seriously injured, the windows and sash being demolished, curtains torn, and furniture broken. A list of the damages, as approximated, is given below.

All through the fire good order was maintained, and when the firemen were once fairly at work they made it count with telling effect. All the persons in business will resume, but perhaps not in the same places.

It is not known whether the Council House, in which many church papers and records were kept, and which together with many articles of furniture, etc., was destroyed, will be rebuilt, or torn down. The probabilities are that a fine block will be erected on the spot of this disastrous conflagration which will be a source of pleasure though one can but regret that it has been preceded by great loss to so many excellent men.

The Museum had a marvelous escape and that unappreciated repository of many rare and valuable relics for the first time in its career was favored by fortune. It has been so severely left alone that even the explosion did not choose to disturb it and a few panes of glass destroyed embraces the loss sustained by it.

The explosion was of black powder, not giant, and was stored in a fireproof arrangement on wheels, and did not explode until the flames had enveloped it for a period of fifteen or twenty minutes, by which time it must have been almost red hot.

The names of those more seriously injured are: Charles Fever-year, arm broken and bruised about the head; John Cardell and Richard Cardell, bruised badly the latter being rendered temporarily insensible for a time;

Geo. Lawrence, cut by glass; George Arn, rib broken, and a number of others more or less badly bruised, including Geo. Arbogast, Charles Auer, Henry Skonberg, Richard Roach, Mars Lauren, Minnie Manfred and Gail Burnett. The loss by the fire is given as follows:

B. B. Clawson	$30,000, ins. $23,000.
R. Dye	3,000; no ins.
Mr. Sorensen	800; "
Mr. Rawlins	100; "
Sorensen & Carlquist	6,000; ins. $3,000.
C. R. Savage	12,000; ins. $4,000.
Elias Morris	6,000; no ins.
Council House	10,000; "
Jos. H. Parry	1,000; "
Mrs. E. R. Wells	150; "
H. Arnold	750; "
Total	$60,800. $30,000.

There are doubtless a few other losses which probably come under the above heading, but $70,000 will probably cover the entire amount so lost. The damage caused by the explosion covers a wider range and can not be given in satisfactory detail, but the following is a fair list, and the figures are as near accurate as can be arrived at:

Z. C. M. I.	$3500 00

A Bad Case.

Yesterday an athletic young man, who recently did not lift a horse and its rider on his shoulders, was informed by a couple of medical students that the bloom on his nasal organ was a bad disorder which might extend to his eyes and kill him. Becoming alarmed, he sought their assistance, when they took him into the office and put him through a severe but effective course of medicine, and then placed upon his nose strips of green cotton plaster, the two vivid colors making a delightful chromo—and a sensation, wherever the patient appeared. It was the boys' first case, but the afflicted person avowed that he felt better right away. He ought to; he certainly looked better.

Burial of Mrs. Faust.

The last earthly rites were performed over the remains of the late Mrs. Elsie A. H. Faust, on Thursday afternoon. The funeral services were conducted at the Fourteenth Ward Assembly rooms, in the presence of a large number of friends of the deceased and her family. Brief consolatory addresses were delivered by Elder Robert Neslin and President Wilford Woodruff, Elder John Morgan offering prayer and Apostle H. J. Grant pronouncing the benediction. The remains were interred in the family lot at the city cemetery, Bishop Thomas Taylor offering a prayer at the grave. The warm sympathies of a large circle of friends are extended to Dr. Faust in this deep sorrow.

Bishop Harrington Dead.

The following brief dispatch was received yesterday.

AMERICAN FORK, June 21; '83

Editor Herald: Bishop Harrington died this morning at 10:30 o'clock. Funeral Saturday at 10 a. m. W. B. SMITH.

While the announcement was not unlooked for, nevertheless it gave rise to many painful thoughts among those who knew the deceased and his many excellent qualities. Mr. Harrington was a pioneer from choice, and a legislator by birth. He had all the qualities that were necessary to secure him recognition in whatever country he might have resided; and it is therefore no cause for surprise, that during a long and active career, he has ever been one of the foremost among his fellows. For years he has filled offices of honor and trust, invariably with credit to himself and satisfaction to all those interested. As a member of the Territorial Legislature for years he has been noted for his keen insight, excellent memory, superiority of judgment and liberality and breadth of sentiment and thought. As a result his influence was very marked, and the great prosperity of the Territory to-day is due to the rare ability he and the other veterans have shown and to the manhood they displayed in combining the practical and imaginative in that degree which produces good farmers and good legislators in the same person. The following data sent by a correspondent will prove interesting:

Deceased was born in New Lisbon, Otsego County, New York, January 27, 1816. Was baptized into the church in 1840; moved to Nauvoo in the summer of 1842; was elected justice of the peace August, 1843, and received his commission from Governor Ford; resigned the office in 1846 on account of leaving the state; emigrated to Utah in 1847 and made his home in Salt Lake City until 1850, when he moved to American Fork; formed the ward in 1851 and he was chosen president and bishop. He was appointed postmaster in 1851, which office he held until 1880. The same year (1851) he was appointed orderly sergeant. In 1852 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives for Utah County; remained a member until the last election. In July, 1853, he was elected mayor of American Fork, and resigned last year. He was appointed battalion adjutant in 1853.

The funeral will take place at his home in American Fork, Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. Yours, B. W. DRIGGS, JR.

Pontoon Steam Ship.

Andreas S. Olsen of this city has nearly completed a working model of his patent unsinkable pontoon steam ship, for which he obtained a U. S. patent, and pictorial illustrations were given in the Scientific American some few months ago. The idea consists of two metallic cigar shaped pontoons, divided into a number of separate air tight chambers, and joined together by suitable metallic braces. On the top of these pontoons is reared the ordinary steamboat superstructure, it being designed to have the propeller wheel or screw affixed between the pontoons. The present model pontoons are made of galvanized iron plates riveted and soldered together, being about fourteen or fifteen feet long. On them will be built a small wooden raft work, capable of carrying about twelve persons. It is designed to test its sailing qualities and further demonstrate the practicability of the patent on the waters of Salt Lake a few weeks hence.
